Mate Translate is a Chrome extension that makes it easier to get translations while browsing the web. You can just select any word or text, press a hotkey and view the translation instantly, and the extension offers quite a few other useful features as well. When you've found a word or phrase that you don't understand, you can just select it and use the Shift+T key combination to generate a translation, as well as access this option from the context menu. An optional feature also enables you to generate translations by double-clicking words. Additionally, Mate Translate is available from the Chrome toolbar, where you can also select the source and target languages, as well as access your phrasebook. Offers text-to-speech, transliteration and paid human translations After translating a word or phrase, you can use the extension's text-to-speech feature to listen to them being read, which can be very helpful for language learners. Since certain languages are very difficult to read for a non-native speaker, such as Russian and Chinese, it certainly helps that transliteration is provided when translating. For a number of languages, you can request a human translation that will be delivered to you in a few hours. A fee is required, of course, but this may be a good option if the computer translation just doesn't cut it. View your translation history and save words and phrases If you need to remember certain translations, you can save them in one of the word lists in your Phrasebook. When learning a new language, this feature should be very helpful. Alternatively, you can just inspect your translation history to view all the words and phrases that have been processed. A search function is also available to help you find them. Mate Translate is a Chrome extension that makes it easier to get translations while browsing the web. You can just select any word or text, press a hotkey and view the translation instantly. The extension offers quite a few other useful features as well. Mate Translate for Chrome extension is a huge improvement on the old text-to-speech feature you get with Chrome's built-in dictation tool. But, most importantly, unlike dictation, which transcribes your spoken words into text and displays them on screen, this extension puts the translation on the page, right there in your browser. So, you can just hold a word up and stare at it while it reads the translation aloud. If you are already using dictation, this is a must-have. It's even better if you have more than one Chrome tab open. Free, Works with Google Chrome. Features: + Use with Google Chrome, Mozilla Firefox, or Opera Web browsers + Have any words or sentences read aloud just by holding a word up on the page + Read translations as text (no transcriptions) + Read translations in any language + Includes an optional word-by-word-dictation feature for typing translations + Play translations through the browsers' built-in speakers + Choose any translation language from the language menu + View the words and phrases already translated and saved in a phrasebook + Selected words or phrases can be copied directly to the system clipboard + Translates words and phrases as you type them + Transliteration is also supported for many languages + Interact with the text by searching, selecting, highlighting, or pinching and zooming + Contains an optional visual bookmarklet to let you find translated words faster (works with Chrome and other browsers) + An optional Firefox extension is also available. Mate Translate for Chrome screensavers are for your desktop

The free version of Mate Translate contains the built-in screensaver so you can listen to translations while you work on your computer. The built-in dictionary uses Google Translate, but you can choose another dictionary, in any language, to get the best translation. For example, if you are learning Russian, try using Yandex. You can set the dictionary you want to use as your default. You can even use your own voice as the default. If you just want to speak in your language, this makes it easy for the computers to understand what you are saying. The built
